Richmond Co-production Charter

Co-production is a way of working in which people share power as equals to make decisions or create services that work for them all.

- We are committed to Equality Diversity and Inclusion. We expect co-production to ensure that all voices, particularly those from excluded, underrepresented, and marginalised communities, are heard and valued.
- We expect that co-productive approaches will be used for planning and decision making, and with all local communities, from the earliest stages.
- We will be informed about the ways that plans and decisions are made.
- We will know how we can be genuinely involved in shaping plans and decisions which could matter to us.
- We will be invited to participate and will receive accessible and appropriate information in plain language, with support where needed.
- We expect to be treated as equal partners in co-production.
- We will know how our views have helped shape decisions.

We're Better Together

Easy Read version of the Richmond Co-production Charter

Richmond Working Together rules:

- Co-production is a way of working in which people share power as equals to make decisions or create services that work for them all.
- We will work together with local people and communities for all plan and decision making
- We want everyone to be included in working together to make sure all voices especially those that have not been listened to or heard.
- We will be told about the ways that plans and decisions are made
- We will know how we can be involved in plans and decisions that are important to us
- We will be welcomed to join in with support where we need. We will be treated as equal partners in working together (co-production)
- We will know how we helped change things.